

The RECLAIM Act would help communities struggling with the decline of the coal industry to make a just transition by disbursing $1 billion over five years from the federal Abandoned Mine Lands fund. It could bring $100 million to Kentucky to repair our land and water in places that are struggling with the decline of the coal industry.

The bill was created to fund the reclamation of old strip mine sites in ways that would create economic and community development and was introduced in this Congress by Congressman Hal Rogers and Senator Mitch McConnell. Rogers, McConnell and all of Kentucky's congressional delegation need to hear from their constituents that they must work hard to pass this bill, and with strong provisions for economic development and community participation.

I support a bright future and a just economic transition for communities impacted by the the decline of the coal industry and I urge my Representative and Senators, including Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, to pass the RECLAIM Act with strong provisions for economic development and community participation.
